Soviet officers. They were told that some of them would be sent to the Kotlenska mountains, north of Sliven, where they would be engaged in constructing trench fortifications; the remainder of the group was to be sent to the Yugoslav border area. In a speech to the men of his village, the Gyulovo village alderman said that he understood that the men were to be trained in the use of new Soviet weapons. During the summer of 1951, a census of all two-horse wagons, horses, and harnesses in Gyulovo was made by a commission composed of local officials. Later, an official unit, including a veterinary, arrived from Yambol and examined all wagons, horses between the ages of three and 15, and harnesses. During the same period that the classes of 1909 to 1920 were called up, 65 two-horse wagons and 130 horses and harnesses were requisitioned, the majority from farmers who did not belong to the village agricultural cooperative. It is generally believed that these vehicles and horses are requisitioned for use by the army, but nothing specific was said by the officials concerning the use to which the wagons and horses were to be put or how long they were to be kept.
